Interview Questions and Responses:

Q1: What is your full name?

A1: Joseph Mordarski

Q2: Where are you originally from?

A2: Meriden, Connecticut

Q3: What made you move to upstate New York?

A3: I was offered a job at a large dairy farm.

Q4: How many years of experience do you have farming?

A4: Over 10 years

Q5: What do you do now?

A5: I currently own a small spice rub business and run a homestead.

Q6: When did you start?

A6: I started my business about 2 years ago and about 1 year purchased property to start a homestead

Q7: Do you have any hobbies you enjoy?

A7: I enjoy learning about hydroponics, beekeeping, gardening, composting, and growing my own fruit trees.

Q8: How did you learn about hydroponics?

A8: I had been to an agricultural convention and toured Disney World's hydroponic greenhouse.

Q9: How long have you been bee keeping?

A9: I just started getting the equipment, so I am completely new to the process.

Q10: Is composting difficult to do?

A10: Not at all, you just need to make sure anything you put in your compost pile is organic. There are great sites out there for beginners.

Q11: Are there any tips you would like to share with others who are interested in homesteading?

A11: Start small, do your research, ask questions, and go to different Web sites to compare the information. You can also join communities that have other homesteaders who have a lot of experience and knowledge to help.

To gain a better understanding of the subject and their hobbies I interviewed Joseph Mordarski via telephone as he lives in upstate New York, and I currently live in Western Massachusetts. I have known Joseph for about fourteen years, so I know a good amount of information about him and used the interview to obtain further information.

Throughout the interview I asked several questions to obtain information about his previous farming experience, current experience, and what hobbies he enjoyed doing. I also asked about his hobbies so I could provide that information in the hobbies section of the bioSite. In addition, I asked if he had any information that he would like to share with others who may be interested in homesteading.

I further researched his hobbies of hydroponics, beekeeping, and composting to gain a better understanding of them. During my research of hydroponics, I found several websites that provided different techniques but chose a site that would provide information geared to an audience that would consist of beginners. I also found several websites on beekeeping where I learned several benefits of beekeeping, the type of equipment needed to start, and information on bees themselves.

Since Joseph had mentioned in the interview that there were great sites for beginners on composting and it was not difficult, I delved a bit further to find some information on this. I came across a site that provided not only the basics for beginners but some more advanced techniques for the more experienced composters.

After gathering all the information, I saved the interview in a word document for formatting the content. I asked Joseph to please send a current picture of himself and any that may provide visuals of homesteading. He did ask that I not use his personal homestead, so I chose to use a generic picture to respect his privacy. I also located some pictures via the Web to provide users with a visual of hydroponics, beekeeping, and composting as he wished his techniques remain private. In addition, I saved the external websites that I had found in relation to Joseph's hobbies so they could be embedded into the bioSite for user's access.

I used the keywords homesteading, farming, gardening, hydroponics, beekeeping, and composting as my inspiration for the colors and fonts to maintain simplicity in a neutral tone.

Joseph Mordarski is a native of Meriden, Connecticut where he grew up farming the land and milking 70 cows from early sunrise to late sunset. It was a lifestyle he was born and raised in and when he had the opportunity to work at a larger farm outside his native area, in upstate New York, he jumped at the chance to learn new techniques and meet new people.

As the farming industry dwindled Joseph found himself seeking work elsewhere and created a business in spice rubs. This was a great opportunity for him as upstate New York offered many different styles of meats fresh from the local butchers. But Joseph still longed for the pastime of farming and decided that homesteading was the closest way he could have farm-fresh food while living a self-sustaining lifestyle.

Joseph has been homesteading now for about a year and enjoys hydroponic farming, beekeeping, and composting. He has learned several techniques from other homesteaders and online groups and has just started his beekeeping journey. His interest in hydroponic farming came from a trip to the local agriculture convention where they provide information to farmers and homesteaders on ways to maintain a self-sustaining lifestyle. He also learned about hydroponic farming on a trip to Disney World where they offered a tour of their 2.5 million square foot hydroponic greenhouse. Composting came natural to him as he is always looking for ways to reduce his footprint and give back to nature.

Joseph was recently blessed with a baby girl and intends on enrolling her in the New York State 4-H program to learn about agriculture and sustainable food systems.
